The charge on which he was arrested was satisfactorily established as follows: obtains the greatest victory. He had received about $100 from the two negroe men, under a promise to convey them to the North, and had concealed them in the third story of his house, preparatory to sending them away. One of the negroes having complained of being unwell, he gave him what he said was a dose of medicine, but which was no doubt strych

Auburn then dug a grave in his cellar, and with the assistance of the other negroe, buried his murdered subject. first cutting his throat, ripping open his abdomen, and horribly mutilating the body in other places. This was done, it is supposed, to prevent the negroe from recovering from the effects of the strychnine.

These bloody scenes occurring before the eyes of the other negroe, naturally produced much alarm and uneasiness in his mind; consequently, he embraced the first opportunity to escape from confinement, which he did by leaping from a window in the third story of the house. He then returned to his master, and revealed all he knew about this most singular and horrible transaction. It is believed Auburn was in league with others engaged in the business of running off slaves, but no accomplices have yet been detected.

Auburn was a young man of geenteel appearance and manners, and had capacities as a carver, and designer, to earn from five to eight dollars a day. He gave as a reason for renting a house and opening a grocery, the expected visit of his mother and some of her family from the North, to re side with him in this city.
